

Thank you.

This is not a usual election year. Our nation is under siege from powerful right-wing business and cultural elements and we don't have the luxury of losing another four years to them in the White House, or another six years to them in the U.S. Senate. Most people in New Hampshire, if they don't feel exactly this strongly, are at least uneasy about Bush's overthrow of our values.

My job will be to make sure that the people of New Hampshire understand that Judd Gregg has voted with Mr. Bush on all the important issues that have sent our nation spiraling down a sickening path. Mr. Bush is nothing without his Yes Men.

My job is also to get to the many people in New Hampshire who care more for personal character and strength of conviction than they care about issues. Call it the McCain factor. They are my votes if I can get to them, and I will. I walked 3,200 miles to drum up support for McCain's successful campaign reform bill, and I am a poster girl against the special interest politics of fat cats and lobbyists. For some people, I am a "none of the above" vote they can cast to make a personal statement. I am a Yes vote for many things, too, that people believe in. Democracy, for example.

My age is only a curiosity in this race. The people of New Hampshire, come election day, will know very well what my friends know: that I am physically and mentally quite able to run circles around the old boys in the U.S. Senate. I am not intimidated by them. I am not even very impressed by them. I have been in the gallery and looked down at them taking their naps. I was not napping and got our bill through. Mr. Gregg is napping now in this campaign, and I like to see him do that.

My job is to get to the many angrily disappointed Republicans who feel tricked and misused by the Bush cabal. They need to know that my values, especially when it comes to my disgust at huge deficits and the misuse of the lives of our troops, is not for off their beliefs and values. They need to punish not only Bush, but the weak Yes Men who have gone along with him instead of representing New Hampshire and its values.

My job is to recruit a great team, which I have done, and my job is to be out there and show that I can do this. Believe me, I can.

My victory on November 2 will be a bit of an earthquake for politics as usual. People are ready for a little revolution in this country, and I am their first move.

I hope you are ready for a little revolution, too, and will help me in my campaign by signing up at GrannyD.com and taking some of my brochures to spread around your neighborhood.

Thank you.
